

Universal mathematics' result of matter

By His Majesty King Ken

Matter = density. Matter's element = Solid, liquid. Erase gas and the others, they are elements of these two. Liquid = fluids. Attempting to name every density of the universe is impossible, there are infinite amounts, therefore, we must categorize them under two elements.

- The equation of everything.

This reads:

Existence = Matter ÷ pressure.

There can be no nothingness, only existence. There was no beginning of the universe, as there will be no end. A mother's matter is her mother's and father's matter, now her matter is her child's, and this goes on and on until the end of that generation. But matter never vanishes, the matter of the whole generation is out there in the universe, producing otherwise. Matter has to be in matter to grow, existence is everywhere, existence does not grow, it recycles. We are unimaginably small, at the same time, unimaginably large. If one is not amazed by the mechanism of the universe, sad they must be.

- Explanation of “matter divided by pressure”:

The universe is nothing but density. Pressure creates heat, heat added or subtracted from matter defines the density. Every density that works together = body = mass. Two densities can repel, compel, or blow up, nonetheless, we are all related.